The largest coaching party of the season was given Thursday nght by the Warwick Club to its members and their ladies. Four tally-hos were required, and the merry-makers were much in evidence along the city boulevards and country drives adjacent until 11:30, when the party returned to the spacious club parlors, where an elaborate luncheon was served. The evening was an ideal one for such a party and the occasion will long be remembered as another of the successes of this popular club. Those present were

Although Miss Criley's home is now in Indianapolis, the younger set still claims her as one of its most charming members, and her return to visit has been the occasion of much entertaining. Mrs. Wood's dance was the most formal of these, and the dainty evening frocks of the young women added much to the beauty of the scene in the large office of the hotel, which was cleared for dancing. The ample verandas were hung with Japanese lanterns, while flags draped the dancing hall. Refreshments, too, were served at one end of the veranda. Mr. and Mrs. J. Chalmers Hall. The marriage of Miss Adah E. Brokaw and Professor Ernest B. McAfee, was solemnized at 5 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, in the parlors of the First Presbyterian church. Seventh street and Nebraska awenue. Kansas City, Kas. Fully 200 invited friends and relatives witnessed the marriage service which was conducted by the Rey, Mr. Clelland B. McAfee, the groom's brother. The parlors of the church were beautifully decorated with blooming flowers, ferns and paims, which added to the impressiveness of the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. McAfee are widely and favorably known in the two Kansas Citys, the bride enjoying a large acquaintance throughout the state of Kansas. For several years she served as instructor in Greek and Latin at the Abilene, Kas., college, and is recognized as one of the ablest feminine educators in the West. Mr. C. L. Brokaw, cashier of the Commercial state bank of Kansas City, Kas., and Augustus P. Brokaw, of Kansas City, Mo., are her brothers. gustus P. Brokav

The groom is one of the most popular professors at the Parkville college, where he has held one of the important chairs for several years. Mr. and Mrs. McAfee left directly after their marriage on a wedding tour through Colorado. They will return to Parkville next month and will be at home to friends there after September 1.

The most sincere good wishes and heartiest congratulations were extended to the bride and groom, who were also the recip-ients of many costly and handsome pres-

"I never feel." said a woman who had traveled all over the world, "that I am really off for a trip until I have lost and had an agonized hunt for my keys. Then, and then only, I feel sure that I am ready to start on my travels. My last experience was decidedly thrilling—so upsetting, in fact, that then and there I resolved to reform, and never again to mislay anything of importance. We were leaving a seashore cottage we had leased for the summer and going direct to the ocean steamer. Our boxes were all shipped, the house was put in order for leaving, and when every one was out I turned the key in the lock and delivered the bunch to the agent. As we went up the gangway the usual vertigo seized me. "Were my tickets and keys safe?" Horrors! I found that I had left everything—steamer—tickets, stateroom vouchers, keys for our trunks—all behind. In an hour and a half the vessel would sail.

"Where did I leave them!" I exclaimed in answer to my family's frenzied demand; 'it must have been in my room on the bureau. I remember: I began, with my usual reminiscence, 'that I laid them down just as—"Heavens, mamma!' broke in my practical eidest daughter, 'there is but one thing to do—I must go back and get them, and try and catch the steamer. Good-by! If you don't see me I will come over in the next ship, and will cable,' and she rushed down to the dock.

"But how will she get into the house?"

the next ship, and will cable, and she rushed down to the dock.

"But how will she get into the house? said my husband, whose slow intelligence had finally grasped the situation, and who wore his usually resigned expression at such crises. (She will just have time, I think, but the house is locked up.

"Milly will manage, said her little brother confidently. And manage she did. Just before the last bell rang, and before we had made up our minds what to do if she did not return, she appeared, breathless, but triumphant. She had climbed into a window of the cottage which she found open. I would have broken it, she declared, if I had found no other way. And, rushing up to my room, she found, everything as I had said. (I am rather good about remembering, by the way. good about remembering, by the way, when I really set myself to work to think out.) "She tipped the man to make him gallop sne tipped the man to make him gallop the horse she had hired at the station, and just caught the next train, the boat and finally the 'elevated.' which she took to the pier. If she had missed a connection anywhere she would have been too late."

English and Italian Lemonades.

Lemons are the foundation for many drinks that are always acceptable. The English and Italian lemonades are far su-perior to the crude beverage familiar to us under that name, though they are a trifle more difficult to prepare.

English Lemonade.—Pare two oranges English Lemonade.—Pare two oranges and six lemons as thinly as possible, steep them in a quart of hot—not boiling—water, for four hours Boil one and a quarter pounds of granulated sugar in three pints of water, strain it, and add to the two liquors the juice of six oranges and a dozen lemons. Stir well, then strain through a jelly bag, and ice. This will be found most delicious.

jelly bag, and ice. This will be found most delicious.

Italian lemonade,—This approaches liqueur in richness. To make a gallon of it two dozen lemons should be pared very thinly, then squeeze, the juice to be poured on the peels and allowed to remain on them welve hours. Two pounds of granulated sugar, a quart of white wine and three quarts of boiling water should then be added, and, subsequently, a quart of boiling milk. The whole should then be strained through a jelly bag, and it is ready for use.

Seashore Girl Eschews Jewels.

Your truly well set up girl at the season does not wear a gold, silver or gun metal chain about her neck. She cares not if the metal thread is strung with jewels as big as her thumb, and as precious as the tomb of Mahomet. They are incidents in her past life, not to be recalled, and in their stead she wears an elastic ribbon, one-fourth of an inch wide, black or white, and long enough to pass around her neck, having two ends to tuck into her belt. A slide slines over the ribbon, a jeweled slide, very small; either a wee square tortoise in a Gypsy setting or three infinitesimal diamonds set in a row. By aid of the slide a loop of ribbon is made to drop over the head, while to one end of the narrow silk reins is fastened a watch, to the other her smoked sailing and driving glasses.

A woman in a neat brown coat and shorter skirt, brown Alpine hat, brown allowes, scarlet plque shirt walst and brown high boots stepped from a Chestnut street car one day recently during a heavy rain. No one had noticed that the gown was short until she alighted. Then the men looked at one another and smiled. The women eyed her narrowly in all her tidiness, and at length seemed to approve. One more impulsive than the others turned to another and bade her: "You wait, You just wait until I come back from the country. I shall dress that way, too. But I want to get used to it—nine inches from the ground, you know—before I appear on the city streets!" A woman in a neat brown coat and Cheese Turnovers. Cut some nice puff paste into rounds or squares and on one-half lay some nicely grated or sliced cheese and sprinkle it with pepper and salt, and add bits of butter. The cheese should be within half an inch of the edge of the square or round, so that when the other half is turned over, the edges, previously dampened with water, may be neatly fastened down. Brush them all over with milk and bake in a quick oven.
